LOVE in Hebrew

Did you know that commercial artists touch every aspect of your life? It could be the clothes you are wearing, food you are eating, the decoration in your room or office, even the layout and design of this paper. There will always be a need for commercial artists, which is why The Art Institute of Indianapolis located in the iconic Pyramids in 2006. After opening their doors with 64 students, the school now has over 900 students preparing to be graphic designers, interior designers, web designer, fashion design, fashion managers and chefs.

The school has thrived not only because there was a niche in Indiana that needed to be filled, but also because of the leadership of President Madeleine Slutsky. She is a Chicago native that came to Indianapolis in 2006 shortly after The Art Institute of Indianapolis opened. The plan was to be an interim president, but President Slutsky fell in love with Indianapolis, the people and the sense of community, and has not left.

President Slutsky has led the school to recognition from their accrediting body and national and local organizations. She has been in the education field for over 23 years, serving in various roles in academic affairs and career services after earning her bachelor's degree from University of Illinois and masters in educational leadership from Argosy University. Slutsky's knowledge along with her approachable demeanor and openness with staff, faculty and students has contributed to her and the school's success.

Whenever she can, Slutsky educates those around her about her culture and Jewish upbringing, including using Yiddish sayings that fit so well in many circumstances. Recently during a trip to Israel, Slutsky wanted to share some of her experiences and the many historical sites to the entire Art Institute of Indianapolis community. Thanks to the magic of the Internet, she was able to send photos of historic places and some interestingly familiar sights including the Robert Indiana Love sculpture in Hebrew (ahava) located in the Sculpture Garden at the Israel Museum in Jerusalem.

"I thought the whole team would be excited and proud to see the reach of one of our own well-known art pieces depicted in another language," said President Slutsky. "I also wanted them to know I was thinking about them!"

Slutsky does not see a slow down for the school. Currently the second expansion is being started to accommodate the student growth. Our International Culinary School, which is part of the largest culinary school programs nationwide, needs another kitchen. A dining lab that is open to the public will also be part of the expansion. The public is welcome to enjoy the free gallery in our lobby of Pyramid 1. A graphic design of rock posters is being displayed right now and in July, the Third Annual Student Show will begin. Call 317-613-4800 for gallery hours.

Wicked, wickedly funny

REVIEWED BY CHARLIE EPSTEIN

If want to see the fabulous musical Wicked, you are just out of luck. This musical, based on the story of what happened in the land of Oz before Dorothy arrived, has a three-week run at the Murat Theatre, but it was 95.5 percent sold out before it opened, which means the only seats available have obstructed views and, of course, standing room only. That's how popular this show is.

Wicked is actually the story of three witches, Nessarose, the one that is killed when Dorothy's house lands on her, Glinda the "Good" Witch, and Elphaba the "Wicked" Witch, born completely green. Actually Glenda and Elphaba were roommates in school. How they become what they are is the story of Wicked, based upon the book by Gregory Maguire. This fascinating show has music and lyrics by Stephen Schwartz with the book by Winnie Holzman. Besides the very cleaver dialogue by Holzman and admirable lyrics by Schwartz, the musical boasts several special effects.

The two main witches, Glenda and Elphaba, are expertly performed by Heléne Yorke (Glinda's part originally played by Kristen Chenowith) and Marcie Dodd (Elphaba, the Green one, who also played the role on Broadway). Kristine Reese played the role of the third witch, Nessarose, Elphaba's sister. Tom McGowan was the Wonderful Wizzard of Oz (originally played by Joel Grey) and Marilyn Caskey had the engaging role of Madame Morrible, the head of the school.

The enchanting costumes were by Susan Hilsery. The complicated lighting and sound were by Kenneth Posner and Tony Mecia. The difficult musical staging was by Wayne Cilento. And the show was directed by Joe Mantello. The massive scenery was by Eugene Lee. The production supervisor was Thom Widmann, while Jake Bell was the technical supervisor. All these people and more provided the fun and magic to this grand show. After the show, the air in the theater was electrifying, as it was in the lobby before curtain.

The Broadway Across America schedule for next season sounds equally promising, with the opening of The Color Purple in December, followed by 101 Dalmations, the musical and the popular A Chorus Line. Next comes Legally Blond, the musical, and the big full-week run of Jersey Boys. Mama Mia and Chicago are the bonus shows.

fan as you shower or take a bath so humidity doesn't permeate throughout the house.

Use the shady side. If you use window air conditioning units rather than central air conditioning to cool your home, install the units on the shady side of the house for the most efficient performance.

Fill 'em up. Only run your dishwasher when it's full. Turn off the heated-dry option and air-dry dishes. Full refrigerators run more efficiently than ones only partially full, and new models use half the electricity of older units.

Keep it cool. Make sure the door seals on your refrigerator are tight by trying this test: close the door over a piece of paper or a dollar bill, positioned half inside and half out. If you can easily pull the paper or bill out, the latch may need adjustment or the seal may need to be replaced. Also, be sure to put food and liquids in airtight containers. Uncovered foods release moisture, making the compressor work harder. Finally, unless you have a no-clean condenser model, move the refrigerator away from the wall and vacuum condenser coils annually. Clean condenser coils enable the refrigerator to run for shorter periods of time, which saves energy.

Lighten up. Instead of brightly lighting an entire room, focus light where you need it. Consider dimmer switches and three-way lamps, which provide low light when necessary. Try using fluorescent lights under cabinets and for lighting kitchen sinks and countertops. Replace incandescent bulbs with energy efficient compact fluorescent lamps (CFLs) in fixtures throughout your home. CFLs are much more efficient than incandescent bulbs and last six to 10 times longer. Although CFLs are more expensive than incandescent bulbs, they pay for themselves over their lifetime. Komodo Dragons exhibit opens Summer 2009 is when dragons bite their way into the Indianapolis Zoo! That's when Dragons of Komodo presented by Citizens Energy Group opens, and these fiercely beautiful and extremely impressive reptiles will be on exhibit from Memorial Day Weekend to Labor Day Weekend only. Featured this summer at the Indianapolis Zoo are two Komodo dragons, Hudo and Dipsner. These dragons, native to Indonesia and on loan from the Denver Zoo, will star at the Indianapolis Zoo beginning May 23. This very special, limited-time exhibit runs through Sept. 7, 2009. It brings a unique brand of magic to Zoo visitors who may not have ever seen a real dragon.

Hudo and Dipsner are five-year-old brothers and may live up to 30 or 40 years. They each weigh about 70 pounds and are over eight feet long. Because of their cold-blooded biology, the Zoo must keep the dragons' environment between 75 and 95 degrees. At the Zoo, their diet includes rats and fish, but these clever creatures are deadly stealth predators in the wild. Komodo dragons sleep during the night, so should be alert during the daytime.

At up to 10 feet long, Komodo dragons are the largest lizards in the world. On their island habitat of Komodo, they are the top predator. The Komodo dragons are known to hunt prey many times their own weight with a unique hunting technique. They ambush from a hidden spot, bite their prey, and follow it until it succumbs to toxic bacteria from the bite. It may take days to bring down a buffalo.

Komodo dragons are endangered. With only 3,000 to 5,000 of them in existence, many zoos in the United States and throughout the world are helping to protect this fantastic lizard species by creating captive breeding programs, raising funds and providing support.

This exhibit is free for Indianapolis Zoo members and included with regular Zoo admission. Visit indianapoliszoo .com for more information, or phone (317) 630-2001. ■

Imagine a day full of music

Ms. Juliette's Musical Day is a home-based parents-day-out program for children from 6 weeks to 4 years old, located near 73rd and Ditch. The program offers a day full of music, a day in which children sing and play through joys and challenges. Children discover and learn through music. This program offers children that type of discovery.

This program uses music to stimulate and calm, to transition, redirect, and focus. Music is woven into the fabric of the day from the greeting songs, through the morning music class, to singing about each of the activities and tasks, and ending with singing goodbye.

Even very young children are able and eager to use their voices, move, listen, and play simple instruments.

Juliette Nehring, who runs the program, is the mother of five with over 20 years of experience as a sitter, nanny, and preschool teacher. Her thoughtful and intuitive approach and love of children has led her through years of training and enrichment to developing her own home-based programs.

With a degree in music from Butler University and a specialty in vocal music, Juliette has had a passion for music and education all of her life. Along with teaching general music at elementary schools, preschools, and nursing homes, she has been giving private and group lessons for all ages since 1994.

Philanthropy

A visitor to Israel attended a recital and concert at the Moscovitz Auditorium. He was quite impressed with the architecture and the acoustics. He inquired of the tour guide, "Is this magnificent auditorium named after Chaim Moscovitz, the famous Talmudic scholar?"

No,"replied the guide."It is named after Sam Moscovitz, the writer."

"Never heard of him. What did he write?"

The Indianapolis Early Music Festival brings world-renowned performers

The group Reconstruction opens for the 2009 Indianapolis Early Music Festival on June 26. This three-weekend, eight-concert event will take place at the new Basile Opera Center at 4011 N. Pennsylvania.

Reconstruction not only reproduces the music of the Baroque, but transcends it in a unique and very appealing version of this music. The quality is undeniable.

The name of this group is synonymous with renovation, modernization and transformation. An incredibly clear blend delights all of the listeners, and the narrative is distinctly feminine. Three great voices, Baroque cello, harpsichord, 2 Baroque guitars send the spectator to the time of the troubadours.

Their audience-friendly, occasional laugh-out-loud funny antics serve to heighten, rather than distract from the musical experience. From moment to moment one hears subtle glints of jazz, and at these moments they break through the boundaries of chamber music performance.

Their innovative program "Bedlam, Back and Beyond" takes audiences on an exciting journey through sensual love songs and infamous mad songs of the Baroque and beyond. Repertoire includes works by 17th-century composers Henry Purcell and Claudio Monteverdi, as well as a newly commissioned work by Karen Hansen and even a new take on an old Willie Nelson favorite. These five women are not to be missed!

On June 27, Ex Umbris will perform a program called "Melancholy" or "Downe in the Dumpes in Elizabethan England." This show focuses on pop music from Elizabethan England and also has a theatrical element and at times will be very humorous. A group of five musicians will play every instrument and sing, and are considered one of the most versatile multi-instrumentalists on the planet. Visit www.emindy.org for more information on this and all concerts of the season.

A July 10 concerts includes folk music performed by Chris Norman and David Greenberg, Mark Cudek, artistic director of FMS, and Grammy-nominee Ronn McFarlane. This is a once-in-a-lifetime performance put together for our festival.

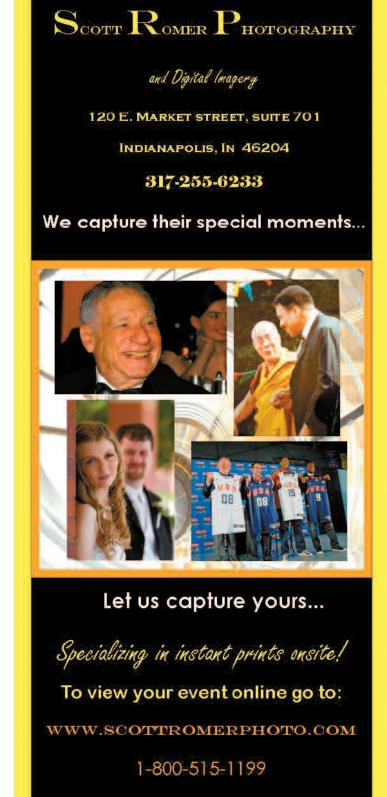

On July 12, I Furiosi performs. The July 17 concert includes Harmonious Blacksmith, with Allison Edberg. And on July 19: The Peabody Consort with actors from Indiana Repertory Theatre will present If Musick Be the Food of Love, from Shakespeare plays.

Single tickets are $22 for adults and $12 for students and are available online. Group prices and discounted vouchers in quantities of 6, 8, or 10 vouchers are also available by calling 577-9731 or fms@iquest.net.
